There are bands that have a special sensitivity. Madee is one of them, as the songs they've been offering since their first album "Songs from Cydonia" (02) until this brand new "Secret chamber" (03) are absolutely wonderful. They've been playing together for ten years under different names, different styles. Starting as Girls Vs. Boys and Archers of Loaf fans, they turned their amps a little low and started their song-jewelry approaching to Mineral or Sunny Day Real State, never forgetting their early and genuine influences: U2, Echo & The Bunnymen or The Flaming Lips. Nowadays Madee is one of the most acclaimed spanish indie bands, and it's not for free. Listen to any of their highlights: "Clumsy", "Economy", "Hidden" or the title-track "Secret Chamber" and you'll see they are some of the most marvelous pieces this year has given to our ears. The reason is simple: they have so much experience, live and in studio; they play so damn well; they have the most sensual male voice you may have heard in ages; and they have such a songwriting talent, able to make you sweat in quietness. No free loudness, no posse bullshit. Pure love to music. A true gift.
