Like a slap in your face. There are bands which apparently sound chaotic, sharp, out of control and dusty as a band of rhinos treading on your feet. But if you read between the lines and, specially, if you see them live, you'll realize how much subtlety there is inside their music. Not so many drummers can have the sense of order, dynamics, detail and ferocity at the same time as Marcos has. And that perfectly technical and soaring bass as played by Pablo. And the schizoid guitar playing and visceral singing of Jose, that make the whole a combination of musical smartness and attitude dirtiness.

They started along with a generation of spanish bands like Joe K-Plan, Margarita or Challenger, all of them with advanced skills on playing but, besides that, a totally modern way to approach to rock and roll. Betunizer's main goal must be probably finding the boogie, the soul, the flow, the groove in a junkyard of sounds. They've been doing it live around Europe even before having any record released, in all kinds of underground greasy caverns. They'll never make things easy for you, but that means that once you've made the effort, you may find one big treasure.
